Looking at the rules for a game called Bible Taboo, it seems like teams have to guess which character or thing is being described without using certain "taboo" words. The team gets points if they correctly guess the word and loses points if they can't be bothered to play along. It's apparently a fun activity that works well with large groups of people. 1. Did kids enjoy playing Bible Taboo? 2. In this game, they weren't allowed to say certain words or phrases; did this make it hard for them to communicate with their teammates? 3. Do you think words are important? 4. Besides using words, how else can kids and youths communicate with each other? 5. Have you heard the saying "actions speak louder than words"? Do you agree with this saying? Why or why not? We got ways to show love for God & others isn't just about words - it's about makin those words real in how we live everyday life. To put last lesson into practice, what can we do today? How about preventin people from gettin hurt or robbed? We should take action on sayin we love God & each other by showin it through our daily actions.
